Figure S1. Three pollinator-oriented flower gardens from Lubbock, Texas. Top: Russian sage (Salvia yangii) established as part of the grounds of Texas Tech University in Lubbock, Texas, USA. Middle: Pollinator habitat established at the Texas Tech University Horticultural Gardens and Greenhouse. Bottom: A residential pollinator garden in Lubbock. Such gardens often primarily incorporate native species and other hardy taxa that require reduced care compared to traditional horticultural choices. Even a relatively small garden can enhance urban invertebrate biodiversity. Photos by Scott Longing.
