At 8.41 in the video there is a competency selection for the course module "Forum". Is this correct?
It would be interesting if we could see two different users experience. How the same course is differently accessed based on different learner parameters.

* Give a shorter and more concise presentation about the problem at hand. Say what you're research is FOR.

* Give examples of (if any) competitive products you have researched.

* Scroll slower and explain what you are trying to do exactly. Try to explain ambiguous abbreviations from the user interface.

* Maybe present a link or a short introduction about the Felder-Silverman Learning Model, to accomodate the ones listening.

* Try to make some explanations a bit shorter and don't have dead-times (like the ones on the end of the presentation, where you try to login). Don't be ashamed to "film" more than one take.

Comments/Reviews/Recommendations

I disliked the presentation: in short, too many features presented at once. If addressed to computer scientists, only those having previous experience with Moodle or other e-learning platforms could be receptive, to all others the exposure is incomprehensible. If addressed to foreign language teachers, the technical part (as for instance, the architecture presented at the beginning) is useless.

Moreover, there are long periods in which there is nothing happening on the screen, which is discouraging for the listener in a video interaction.

The user has the feeling that configuring such a system is very cumbersome, and the result is hidden in too many details. There is no evidence to what has been achieved through this process of customisation.

I would configure instead two types of presentations, one for advanced Moodle experts, one for teachers. I would leave active only a few features and show the immediate benefit that the platform offer by manipulating them.

It is also unclear what are the new functionalities of this platform as compared to what is already included in a standard Moodle interface.

With respect to this questionnaire, many questions, as those in the chapter "Perceived Ease of use", are redundant: they mean the same, only put in different words. In the next section, "Using the WASPEC platform in creating personalised learning environments has a positive influence." => positive influence on whom? Being it the user or the student, a "positive influence" is not what is really expected, because no one expects influencing the character of users... but rather performance and new benefits.

Evaluation of the WASPEC Platform

WASPEC is an E-learning platform (developed by customizing MOODLE) which provides personalized learning experiences for learners based on multiple parameters. The video describes the process of personalization as a course instructor or teacher. Please fill the short questionnaire that follow. Thanks!

For further reference, please read:
