Message from the Guest Editors

Endocrinology is a well-recognized subfield of Veterinary Internal Medicine, accounting for a relevant percentage of cases in daily practice. With the advent of new therapeutic approaches (such as new insulin therapies), monitoring strategies (for instance, the current use of continuous glucose monitoring systems for diabetic dogs and cats), genetic research and diagnostic tests (such as the use of UCCR in Addison's disease) highlight the constant research progress of this field. This Special Issue focuses on the current trends of veterinary endocrinology, pointing to recent novelties and current challenges in well-known diseases.

Authors are invited to submit original research, case reports and review articles focusing on etiology, diagnosis, therapy, monitoring and/or prognosis of different topics of canine and feline veterinary endocrinology, including (but not limited to):

1. Diabetes Mellitus;
2. Hyper- and hypocortisolism;
3. Hyper- and Hypocalcemia;
4. Pheochromocytoma;
5. Hypo- and Hyperthyroidism;
6. Insulinoma;
7. Pituitary tumors;
8. Gastrointestinal endocrine tumors;
9. Insulin therapies;
10. Multiendocrine tumors;
11. Hyper- and hypoaldosteronism.

Deadline for manuscript submissions:
