Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue aims to focus on the role of the different species of nc-RNAs in controlling pivotal biological mechanisms, such as gene expression and developmental pathways, as well as on analyzing their dysregulation in the context of many different human diseases, spanning from metabolic, neurological and cardiovascular diseases to cancer. Moreover, it will concentrate on the possibility of using these molecules as biomarkers, with the potential to use liquid biopsies in modern precision medicine. Original research articles and comprehensive reviews are both welcomed here.
