Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

World-widely the pandemic and the other issues such as globalization and digital development force us to re-think and develop our thoughts and ideas about learning and teaching. In the post-COVID-19 era, we need to reconsider how we define the role of education. We invite you for critical reflection and discussion of the position and the quality of Education 4.0? In what ways do we guarantee a high quality environment for learners which meets the criteria of Education 4.0. What elements and factors should we consider when designing and implementing learning and teaching environments in the post-COVID-19 era?

This Special Issue provides a platform for discussion about teaching and learning in a digital age post-COVID-19. We are interested in theoretical papers exploring learning and teaching in the post-COVID-19 era and discussing future perspectives. We welcome empirical papers with novel approaches for developing learning and teaching in different educational settings as well methodological papers related to the topic are appreciated.

We look forward to receiving your contributions.
