Message from the Guest Editors

We are pleased to invite you to submit your research to this Special Issue of Education Sciences, titled Students' Emotions in Learning Contexts. Research tells us that emotions matter – for attention, memory and learning, for relationships, for decision-making, and for students' health and overall well-being. Increasingly, researchers and practitioners alike have focused on the emotional needs of students within various learning contexts, and the implementation of social and emotional learning (SEL) programming.

This Special Issue aims to advance scientific research on students' emotions within learning contexts. For the purposes of this call, we define learning contexts as home, formal (school, in and out of school time) and informal (museums, games, and social networks) and welcome studies speaking to in-person, virtual, and hybrid experiences of emotions.
