Message from the Guest Editors

The objective of this Special Issue is to present the actual state of art in hydrogen energy technologies (fuel cells, electrolyzers, H<sub>2</sub> storage) and hydrogen systems (potentially combining batteries, supercapacitors, photovoltaic modules, wind turbines, etc.), their control and management (including system monitoring), as well as the social and economic challenges facing larger diffusion.

In particular, topics of interest include modeling, control, estimation, diagnosis, prognostic, fault-tolerant control, and long-term planning of hybrid systems based on aging components or environmental conditions, hardware-in-the-loop (HiL) and power hardware-in-the-loop (PHiL) for test validation, but are not limited to the foregoing aspects.
