Message from the Guest Editors

Food is a rich matrix of bioactive compounds with beneficial properties, yet it is also a cocktail of dangerous allergens. Development in the understanding of the influence of bioactive proteins and peptides on the human organism has now become the core of many studies. Novel food sources and food processing technologies are a potential sources of unknown bioactive peptides and new allergens. The diversity of food compounds' activities and interactions with the host causes immunomodulation in organisms. We would like to invite experts from the areas of food allergy, food technology, food safety, bioinformatics, and similar fields to contribute to this Foods Special Issue that will be devoted to the topics described above. We expect original articles, reviews, and short communications, which will help to consolidate the current state-of-the-art knowledge.
