Message from the Guest Editors

The recent experience of the COVID-19 pandemic has been different from the public health experiences we have previously managed, with statistically significant indicators. The globalisation of relations beyond national borders makes protection by isolation unfeasible. However, there is one point that unifies all the aforementioned professional dimensions (medicine, biology, politics, communication, etc.). As each professional carries out a true best practice, this is likely to be aligned with the other professionals' actions. This will contribute to advances in emergency management while promoting trust and increasing social compliance. Unfortunately, during the initial waves of this pandemic, scientific research, political transparency, distributive justice, and the example set by politicians were often not up to standard. For these reasons, we are pleased to invite you to submit concrete proposals to improve our professional practice in order to be prepared for any further pandemic situations in the future.
