Message from the Guest Editors

In the research field of children's literature, a recurrent idea has been that there is an inevitable and problematic connection between literature that touches on political issues and a didactic attitude toward the reader, and that this connection overshadows the possibility of an aesthetic approach to politically oriented literature. In this upcoming Special Issue of Humanities, we are concerned with understanding children's and YA literature as an aesthetic and ethical laboratory, and thus also as a cultural form of expression where different readers can meet and explore representations of climate and environmental politics and activism without requiring the readers themselves to be or become politically swayed or activist in a normatively determined way.

Interdisciplinary approaches are particularly welcome. All submissions will be critically reviewed by peers, aiming for the highest possible scholarly level. Being an online journal, the published papers will reach their desired audiences faster, more reliably, and much more easily than traditional print versions, while upholding the same, if not even higher, scholarly standards.
