Message from the Guest Editors

Polysaccharides embrace a wide class of substances that have attracted considerable attention owing to their desirable physicochemical and biological properties, such as biodegradability, biocompatibility, non-toxicity, as well as non-antigenicity in the fields of nanotechnology, tissue engineering, and drug delivery. This Special Issue aims to explore the more recent advances in the design of oligo- and poly-saccharides, drug-polymer conjugates, and micro- and nano-carriers dealing with the topics of for drug delivery.
