Message from the Guest Editors

In the dynamic landscape of gynecologic oncologic surgery, the past decade has witnessed significant advancements and innovations that urgently call for integration into minimally invasive treatment strategies.

Personalized surgical interventions now gain support from advancements in molecular profiling, while patient safety stands to benefit from a renewed emphasis on anatomical research and a growing recognition of the role of the human factor in surgical outcomes. In light of these developments, we cordially invite researchers, clinicians, and experts in the field to contribute their research to our forthcoming Special Issue: 'New Advances in Minimally Invasive Surgery for Gynecologic Cancer.'

Our collective objective is to curate an outstanding collection of articles that will make significant contributions toward a brighter and healthier future for women facing diagnoses of gynecological cancer. We welcome submissions encompassing a broad spectrum of topics.
