Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

The dental care field has changed radically in recent years, as has the rest of the healthcare world. Oral health has assumed key importance in relation to public health and correlations with systemic diseases. All of this has been accompanied by significant technological developments that have allowed for shorter timelines, reduced discomfort and improved quality of care, including minimally invasive care reserved for patients.

Therefore, this Special Issue aims to gather news regarding dental techniques (in all areas), the care of systemic patients, and the importance of prevention and oral hygiene to ensure quality and outcome, whereby the outcome is understood as success in the dental treatments performed, which, especially in prosthetic rehabilitations, is ensured by periodic checkups and oral hygiene maintenance sessions.

We look forward to receiving your submissions to this Special Issue.
