Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

The cornea is not only the outmost layer of the eyeball, but it also transmits the light essential for vision, giving focus to images. Recent medical and technological innovations have improved cornea diagnosis and contributed to the variety of treatments available.

This Special Issue of the Journal of Personalized Medicine aims to explore updates and perspectives on all kinds of ocular surface diseases, such as keratitis, corneal neovascularization/lymphangiogenesis, dry eye, pterygium, ocular surface related surgery, etc. We are pleased to invite you to contribute studies that use basic science, clinical, and population-based approaches, including, but not limited to, mechanism research, diagnosis, and therapy. Original research articles and reviews are welcome.
