Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

Cancer is a complex disease. Because of successes in screening, early detection, and individualized oncology treatments, cancer is increasingly seen as a chronic condition. Both acute treatment and long-term management require the dedication of a multidisciplinary team of clinicians and researchers, as well as continuing patient engagement and empowerment.

This Special Issue on survivorship focuses on the long-term aspects of living with cancer, and covers a time period from diagnosis, through treatment, and into the years beyond. Topics span biopsychosocial factors, the self-management of symptoms and co-morbidities, lifestyle changes, future survivorship risks, and considerations at the individual, family, and health system levels.
