Message from the Guest Editors

Head and neck surgery is a field under continuous development, where advances in technology have enabled a variety of interventions that are minimally invasive with excellent outcomes, including for patients with cancer. Results have improved considerably over the years in light of these developments and due to the greater expertise of the surgeons. We aim to highlight these improvements that have become the standard of care worldwide over the past few years, and to familiarise our younger colleagues with the current options that are available to them.

Technological developments are also the foundation for better results in multidisciplinary teams, especially when we discuss oncologic patients. The switch from classic open surgery to minimally invasive procedures is directly proportional with patient compliance and an increased adherence to treatment, thus aiding in an end result of a disease-free status.
