

Intercultural Nursing for Older Adults

Guest Editor:

Dr. Annelie K. Gusdal

School of Health, Care and Social Welfare, Mälardalen University,
631 05 Eskilstuna, Sweden

Deadline for manuscript
submissions:

31 December 2024

Message from the Guest Editor

Intercultural nursing is an area of study that focuses on the cultural differences that exist between patients and healthcare professionals and how those differences can affect the quality of care that patients receive. In today's increasingly globalized and diverse society, intercultural nursing is more important than ever and this Nursing Reports Special Issue on “Intercultural nursing for older adults” will provide a platform to highlight the challenges that patients and healthcare professionals face and potential strategies to meet these challenges. Research has shown that adopting an intercultural approach to nursing can improve patients' satisfaction, trust, and adherence to treatment, leading to better health outcomes. We are particularly interested in manuscripts that examine strategies, which registered nurses can use to develop their intercultural readiness and competence in nursing for older patients from diverse cultural backgrounds. The kinds of strategy under examination include for example education and training as well as seeking out diverse clinical experiences.

