Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

Polymeric scaffolds have received intense interest in recent years. Much effort has been exerted in not only the fabrication of advanced scaffolds but also in studying fundamental issues such as cell–scaffold interaction, long-term biocompatibility and degradability evaluation, and the integration of biofunctions with other medical technologies. This Special Issue aims to collect and share cutting-edge research papers and reviews on the topic of “Polymer Scaffolds for Tissue Engineering Applications”, including:

- Biomimetic polymeric scaffolds for specific functions;
- Conductive polymeric scaffolds and biosensors;
- Fabrication and modification of polymeric scaffolds for directing cell behaviors;
- Smart and environmental responsive polymeric scaffolds;
- Polymeric scaffolds for controlled delivery of bioactive molecules
- Novel technologies, mechanisms, and applications of polymeric scaffolds in tissue engineering
