Message from the Guest Editors

Despite the progress in the field of studies on religion and globalization in the last few decades, East Asian religions have received unequal attention so far, as is also testified by the limited number of monographs published on this theme. With this Special Issue of Religions, we aim to offer a framework for empirically grounded and theoretically oriented approaches to the interplay between East Asian religions (including Buddhism, Daoism, NRMs, etc.) and global dynamics. More specifically, we wish to promote the idea that the globalization of East Asian religions includes a wide range of dynamics such as transnationalism and missionization, interactions with other religions and other spheres of social life (e.g., the global markets, global science), as well as the issue of religious glocalization/hybridization. The guest editors encourage and welcome the submission of papers based on non-normative research on these themes related to global dynamics, either from a synchronic or a historical perspective.

- A limited number of publication fee waivers are available.
