Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

Electronic sensors play a crucial role in biological sensing and health monitoring. The real-time monitoring of physiological and behavioral data (heartbeat, respiration, body temperature, gait, etc.) using electronic sensors has provided us with new culture and information for a healthy lifestyle. The Section “Electronic Sensors” is now compiling a collection of feature papers invited by the Topical Advisory Panel Members and advanced results in this research field.

This Special Issue aims to highlight the advances in electronic sensors for biological sensing and healthcare monitoring. Topics include, but are not limited to, the following:

- Electronic/mobile/wearable/implantable sensors for physiological monitoring;
- Soft/stretchable electronics;
- Bio-circuit systems and therapeutic devices;
- E-skins, prosthetics, surgical/non-surgical robotics;
- Human measurement for medical applications;
- Sensor interface, signal processing and data fusion;
- Remote patient monitoring and home health monitoring.
