Message from the Guest Editor

For the last decades, Health Promotion has made major contributions to public health research and practice. The Ottawa-charter emphasizes the importance to strengthen individuals and community action, create supportive environments and built healthy public policy. However, simultaneously as Health Promotion research and practice advances, we can observe adverse societal developments: Increasing social inequality within and between societies impacts population health negatively. Matters of structural racism, stigma and exclusion that have been highlighted in the public debate, but not-yet resolved, continue to impact health and opportunities to participate in society. In this Special Issue, we aim to deepen our knowledge about the role of empowerment, inclusion and social equity in health promotion research and practice. Understanding more about how these affect individual, community and population health; and how they can be addressed and promoted through Health Promotion. Accordingly, we want to invite you to contribute to this Special Issue focusing on “Social Equity, Empowerment, Inclusiveness: The Pillars of Public Health Promotion in Modern Societies”.

Societies (ISSN 2075-4698) is an interdisciplinary journal that brings together different scientific approaches to engage with societal questions to enhance our understanding of the social realm throughout history. The journal publishes original empirical research papers, literature reviews, and conceptual papers. Our aim is to publish papers that have a significant impact on addressing present and emerging societal questions. Therefore, we encourage researchers to publish their results in as much detail as possible. For empirical research papers and literature reviews, all experimental details must be provided, so that the results are reproducible. We also encourage the publication of timely theoretical pieces on topics of interest to existing and emerging societal questions. Papers are either published in the open journal or in Special Issues devoted to specific topics of interest to the field.
