Message from the Guest Editors

Today, it is thought that emerging economies are growing at a faster rate than they were a few decades ago. Much of this is credited to greater mobility and the transfer of capital and migration (Gevorkyan, 2022; Hack-Polay et al., 2021). Some emerging countries are now termed transitional economies (China, Saudi Arabia, Brazil, South Africa, South Korea, etc.) due to their level of development and wealth, which now nears that of some developed nations. These countries have witnessed an engagement of the diaspora in their growth, allowing for the reverse knowledge transfer, which is increasingly known as brain gain (Enkhtaivan, Brusa & Davaadorj, 2021).

This Special Issue is construed from the perspective of human capital; thus, it brings together the contributions of diverse players whose impact can only be better appreciated through a systematic and bigger picture, appraising the development forces in emerging economies. We are eager to receive submissions from researchers in both the Global South and the Global North, whose investigations touch on the unspoken contributions that are driving growth in many emerging economies.
