Message from the Guest Editors

Sustainable development is the goal of every economy that transitions to renewable energy sources and reduces its reliance on fossil fuels. Numerous macroeconomic parameters accelerate energy use and contribute to environmental degradation in all economies. This subject matter helps to bring us to the effects of the macroeconomic performance scale.

The goal of this Special Issue is to compile research from both developed and developing countries that compares the environmental impacts of various macroeconomic indicators and energy policies in order to provide the best macroeconomic strategy for sustainable development.

- GHG emissions
- sustainable development goals
- energy economics
- resource economics
- energy policy
- renewable energy transition
- nuclear energy
- energy efficiency
- energy security
- fossil fuels
- econometrics
- macroeconomic determinants of energy consumption and pollution emissions
- the Environmental Kuznets Curve hypothesis
- economic growth
