Message from the Guest Editors

With this Special Issue, we are looking for new concepts, models, and applications toward sustainable and safe transportation and supply chain systems. We are especially interested in theoretical, practical, and/or simulation studies on one or more of the following topics:

- The elasticity, agility, and flexibility of transportation systems and supply chains
- The risk and breakdown of transportation systems and supply chains
- The reliability of transportation systems and supply chains
- The safety of transportation and supply chains
- The level of intelligence and operation efficiency of transportation and supply chains
- The restructuring of global transportation systems and supply chains
- The resource allocation in global supply chains
- The green transportation system and the reconstruction of supply chains
- Deployment of the manufacturing industry and global supply chains
- A new paradigm for global transportation systems and supply chains

Submitted papers should clearly address one or more sustainability-related issues in the areas of transportation system, logistics, and/or supply chains, with consideration of the impacts of the COVID-19 pandemic.
