Message from the Guest Editors

The adaption of renewable energy systems and the action of governments towards energy transitions and environmentally friendly projects play significant roles in sustainable development. In this respect, green finance is a crucial argument and power of governments in hand at the crossroads of financial, socio-economic and environmental challenges since it uses financial instruments to facilitate and accelerate the energy transition for the sake of a low-carbon economy.

The guest editors welcome both theoretical and empirical studies that focus on a multi-disciplinary investigation concentrated around the idea of green finance in the development of energy transitions from a technology, environmental, economic and policy perspective.
