Message from the Guest Editors

Freshwater ecosystems support over 18,000 fish species, a quarter of all known vertebrates, as well as thousands of other animal and plant species. These critical ecosystems, and the diversity of life they support, are highly imperiled by numerous, interacting threats. Habitat degradation, flow modification and fragmentation, non-native species introductions, pollution, overexploitation, and climate change have resulted in IUCN threatened status for nearly one-third of all listed freshwater fish species [.....]

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

In the context of global changes, the sustainable management of water cycles, going from global and regional water cycles to urban, industrial and agricultural water cycles, plays a very important role on the water resources and on their relationships with food, energy, biodiversity, ecosystem functioning and human health. Water invites authors to provide innovative original full articles, critical reviews and timely short communications and to propose special issues devoted to new technological and scientific domains and to interdisciplinary approaches of the water cycles. We ensure a critical review process and a quick turnaround between submission and final decision.
